Text. 1 Tim. 4[8] for bodily exercise is profitable for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come.

Theme. A Preacher's Profitable Use of Godliness.

Proposition — In so far as the preacher lives a godly life can he claim for his order its precious promise of eternal life and for proclaim to others the life and the love of Jesus Christ.

Intro.

I. The Greek athletic games.
   1. The preparation of the contestants.
   2. The little reward of the victors.

II. Godliness illustrated — Jesus Christ, the personification of godliness.

III. If the saying be true that "Christians are the world's Bible", it is none the less true that preachers are the world's Lord.

Discussion

I. A preacher's profitable use of godliness personally.
   1. In civic and municipal affairs.
   2. In the social world.
   3. In his own home.

Discussion Continued

II. The power of godliness in the hands of a preacher to win souls for their saving and keeping in Jesus Christ.

1. The power of godliness in his sermons.
2. The power of godliness in his ~~personal~~ pleading with souls personally.

Conclusion

I. Let us students of the ministry seek to actualize in ourselves ~~and in others~~ that ideal godly life in Jesus Christ to which we are calling our fellow men.

II. The incorruptible and never-perishing crown of godliness unto eternal life and glory with Christ.

You can improve the statement and arrangement of your main thoughts in the "Discussion". His use of godliness "personally" really runs through both divisions. The personal element enters into the sermon, and, as you state in II. 2, he pleads with souls "personally."

I would suggest 5 divisions, as follows,

A preacher's profitable use of godliness in:

I. Public matters.
II. Social affairs
III. Domestic relations
IV The pulpit
V. Personal work.
